Alex Feuerstein

The compositions in Alex Feuerstein's paintings show abstract scenes that oscillate between fiction and reality. Banal perspectives change into dream-like sequences that are left so wide open and alienated that they can neither be clearly assigned in time nor in space: Is it the sun that shines there or perhaps the moon after all? Are the bizarrely billowing loops plumes of smoke or thunderclouds? Feuerstein works without any motivic model and allows randomly created forms and textures to influence the further steps in the creation process of his works. Thus the viewer's focus is lost in Feuerstein's seemingly two-dimensional, yet multi-layered textural landscapes. In his collage and camouflage-like compositions, in which subjects and objects, foreground and ground seem to merge, Feuerstein invites us to participate in his games of interpretation, which inevitably immerse us in his intimate, bizarre and obstinate world.
